NORMA SHERWOOD

Applicant

and

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF CANADA

Respondent

JUDGMENT AND REASONS

I. Overview

[1] Ms. Norma Sherwood represents herself on this application for judicial review of the March 27, 2015 decision of the Appeal Division of the Social Security Tribunal [SST-AD]. The SST-AD refused leave to appeal a decision of the General Division [SST-GD] finding that a claim for Employment Insurance [EI] benefits should not be antedated as good cause for the delay in making the claim had not been shown.

[2] The SST-AD determined that the arguments Ms. Sherwood sought to advance on the appeal were essentially repetitive of those made before the SST-GD and that she had not demonstrated a reasonable chance of success on one of the three grounds of appeal identified at subsection 58(1) of the Department of Employment and Social Development Act, SC 2005, c 34 [DESDA].

[3] Ms. Sherwood very ably advanced her arguments on the application and her sincerity in advocating her position was evident. However, on this judicial review, the role of the Court is to assess whether the decision under review is reasonable. This requires the Court to consider whether the reasons reflect an intelligible, transparent and justifiable decision-making process and whether the result falls within the range of reasonable acceptable outcomes based on the facts and the law. Applying this standard, as I am obligated to do, I am unable to identify any error on the part of the SST-AD warranting my intervention in this case. The application is dismissed for the reasons that follow.

II. Background

[4] Ms. Sherwood had worked for Symcor as a data entry operator for approximately 18 years, from October 1985 until her termination in September 2003. Her termination was the consequence of outsourcing. She received a severance package that paid her benefits until January 30, 2004. She did not apply for regular EI benefits at the time of her termination.

[5] In November of 2003, Ms. Sherwood was diagnosed with a condition requiring multiple surgeries on her left hand. As a result of her medical condition she was approved, in July 2004, for sick benefits that were antedated to February 16, 2004 for a 15 week maximum period. Ms. Sherwood asserts that in the summer of 2004 she inquired about further EI benefits at the Scarborough Service Canada office and each time was given documentation to apply for Canada Pension Plan [CPP] disability benefits. She applied for disability benefits. The application was denied and the denial was maintained by the Appeals Board in 2007.

[6] As noted above Ms. Sherwood did not apply for EI regular benefits at the time her employment was terminated and it is not in dispute that she did not apply for EI benefits related to the termination of her employment in 2003 at any other time prior to the filing of her claim on January 13, 2014. Ms. Sherwood asserts that she had the intention of doing so but was directed to apply for CPP disability benefits. She further asserts that upon being denied CPP disability benefits in 2007 she again inquired about a claim for regular EI benefits but was advised that she did not qualify.

[7] Ms. Sherwood returned to work in 2008 through a placement agency and in 2011 pursued a claim for EI benefits relating to her post 2008 employment. That claim that was denied as she had insufficient insurable hours within the qualifying period. She did not inquire into, or apply for, benefits relating to her 2003 termination of employment at that time.

[8] In 2013 Ms. Sherwood became aware of a news story that reported government fraud detection investigators, as part of a broader money saving initiative within the Federal Government, were required to work to a quota in identifying fraudulent claims within the social service system. This report led Ms. Sherwood to write to senior government officials regarding her 2003 EI sick benefit claim. She received a written response advising her that she had received the maximum amount of EI sick benefits. The written response also advised her that “[w]hen [she] originally applied, [she] was in fact entitled to receive up to 50 weeks of EI benefits, however, regardless of whether or not all weeks of entitlement were paid, your benefit period ended on March 26, 2005.” The response letter indicates that there was no record of her requesting to convert the EI sick benefits to regular benefits and that should she decide to request to antedate a claim for these regular benefits she “must show that [she] had good cause for delaying [her] conversion request for nearly nine years for it to be approved.”

[9] It appears that on the basis of this information Ms. Sherwood then applied for EI benefits on January 13, 2014, requesting that her claim be antedated to 2004. She relied on her serious illness, the stress of having lost her long term employment, and that she was confused and misunderstood the information from Service Canada to explain why she had applied for EI sick benefits but not regular benefits in 2004.

[10] The request was denied by the Canada Employment Insurance Commission and Ms. Sherwood sought reconsideration. In seeking reconsideration she again relied on her medical circumstances in 2004. She also submitted she had been treated unfairly and given incorrect information: Service Canada provided her with information relating to CPP benefits instead of providing information and assistance with EI regular benefits.

[11] The request for reconsideration was denied and Ms. Sherwood pursued her claim before the SST-GD.

III. Relevant Legislation

[12] For ease of reference, relevant portions of the Employment Insurance Act, SC, 1985, c 23 [EIA] and the DESDA are reproduced in the Annex attached.

IV. Standard of Review

[13] A decision of the SST-AD denying leave is to be reviewed against a standard of reasonableness (Griffin v Canada (AG), 2016 FC 874 at paras 13-14, Marcia v Canada (AG), 2016 FC 1367 at para 23). The SST-AD is owed deference in respect of its findings of fact, mixed fact and law, and in the interpretation of its home statute (Canada (AG) v Hoffman, 2015 FC 1348 at para 33).

V. Analysis

[14] The decision of the SST-AD is before the Court for review, however in considering the reasonableness of that decision it is necessary to review and consider the decision of the SST-GD.

[15] In refusing Ms. Sherwood's claim the SST-GD references subsection 10(4) of the EIA which provides that an initial claim for benefits may be considered as having been made on an earlier date where: (1) the claimant was qualified to receive benefits on the earlier date being requested; and (2) there was good cause for the delay in making the claim throughout the entire period of the delay.

[16] The SST-GD then noted that: (1) it was Ms. Sherwood's burden to establish the good cause for the delay; (2) good cause required her to demonstrate she acted as reasonable and prudent persons would have in the same circumstances to satisfy themselves of their rights and obligations under the EIA; and (3) absent exceptional circumstances she was expected to take reasonably prompt steps to understand her entitlement to benefits and obligations under the EIA. The SST-GD cited a number of decisions from the Federal Court of Appeal in support of these principles (Mauchel v Canada (AG), 2012 FCA 202; Bradford v Canada Employment Insurance Commission, 2012 FCA 120; Canada (AG) v Albrecht, [1985] 1 FC 710 (CA); Canada (AG) v Kaler, 2011 FCA 266; Canada (AG) v Innes, 2010 FCA 341; Canada v Carry, 2005 FCA 367).

[17] In assessing the claim based on the above principles the SST-GD recognized that Ms. Sherwood had experienced very difficult times through 2004 but was not satisfied this provided an explanation for the entire 10 year period of delay. The SST-GD also acknowledged Ms. Sherwood's evidence to the effect that Service Canada employees had provided information with respect to CPP disability benefits when they should have recognized her entitlement to EI benefits but noted this did not relieve her of her obligation to ascertain her rights under the EIA.

[18] The SST-GD concluded that a reasonable and prudent person would not have waited as long as Ms. Sherwood did to satisfy herself as to her rights and obligations and found that a 10 year delay in claiming benefits justified on the basis that the claimant was unaware of her entitlement did not amount to exceptional circumstances. The SST-GD found "good cause" for the entire period of delay had not been demonstrated.

[19] The SST-AD identified “a reasonable chance of success on appeal” as the issue before it. The SST-AD identified the grounds of appeal as set out in subsection 58(1) of the DESDA: (1) a failure of the SST-GD to observe a principle of natural justice, or the SST-GD acting beyond or refusing to exercise its jurisdiction; (2) an error in law in the making of the SST-GD decision; or (3) an SST-GD decision based on an erroneous finding of fact made in a perverse or capricious manner or without regard for the material before it.

[20] The SST-AD then noted that Ms. Sherwood was essentially asking the SST-AD to re-weigh the evidence and that this was not within the enumerated grounds of appeal. In seeking judicial review of the SST-AD decision Ms. Sherwood has again relied on the circumstances relating to her illness in 2004 and the failure of Service Canada to recognize her right to EI benefits.

[21] Having considered Ms. Sherwood’s written and oral submissions, I would frame her argument as follows – the SST-GD decision was based on erroneous findings that are inconsistent with the evidence she presented and the SST-AD conclusion that she had not established a reasonable chance of success on appeal was unreasonable. Despite Ms. Sherwood’s respectful and forceful submissions, I am unable to agree.

[22] The SST-GD correctly noted that Ms. Sherwood had the burden of establishing “just cause” for the full period of delay in claiming EI benefits. In reviewing the record there is some evidence that Service Canada employees advised Ms. Sherwood that she was not eligible for benefits in response to inquiries she made. Ms. Sherwood relies on this evidence to explain why she did not claim benefits at that time and did not do so at any other time prior to 2014.

[23] The SST-GD did not overlook or ignore this evidence. Rather the SST-GD dealt with it directly. The SST-GD noted that Ms. Sherwood provided little detail regarding her Service Canada visits and noted she had a positive obligation to ascertain her rights. In making this finding the SST-GD was also aware of Ms. Sherwood's 2011 claim for EI benefits where again she had the opportunity to pursue her 2004 claim but did not. When asked why, she explained "that she did not think about it." While Ms. Sherwood disagrees with the SST-GD, it was not unreasonable for the SST-AD to conclude that Ms. Sherwood fell short of demonstrating a reasonable chance of success on appeal on the basis that the finding of fact was erroneous and made in an arbitrary or capricious manner.

VI. Conclusion

[24] The SST-AD decision is not the decision Ms. Sherwood would have preferred but as set out above the decision is neither unreasonable nor based on an error in law that would warrant this Court's intervention. The application is dismissed. No costs are awarded.

JUDGMENT

THIS COURT'S JUDGMENT is that the application is dismissed. Costs are not awarded.
